POSITIONING SENTENCE WORKSHEET

A guided worksheet for writing a positioning sentence you can defend in a discovery call.

This preview includes the framework, three worked examples, and a fill-in template.
The full worksheet is available inside The Independent Practice course.

THE FRAMEWORK

01

THE POSITIONING SENTENCE

A positioning sentence is one sentence that names who you serve, the outcome you produce for them, and (by implication) who you do not serve. It is the sentence a stranger could repeat back after a minute on your site. It is the sentence you revise when your practice drifts.

THE SHAPE

I help [specific buyer] do [specific outcome] by [specific approach], so they can [specific change].

Each part is a constraint, not a fill-in-the-blank. If you cannot name a specific buyer, the sentence is not finished. If the outcome could apply to anyone, the sentence is not finished. The sentence is finished when a stranger can name three buyers who would not be a fit.

THREE WORKED EXAMPLES

INDEPENDENT BRAND STRATEGIST

I help founder-led service businesses at the 12-to-40-person stage name what they do and who they do it for, by running a four-week positioning sprint, so they can stop competing on category and start competing on outcome.

EDITORIAL DESIGNER

I help independent magazines and small publishers design their first ten issues, by building a flexible editorial system in twelve weeks, so the editor can ship on schedule without reinventing the layout each issue.

OPERATIONS CONSULTANT

I help two-to-five-person creative studios write down how their practice actually runs, by facilitating a six-week operations audit, so the founder can take a month off without the pipeline freezing.

Notice what each example excludes. The strategist does not serve agencies. The designer does not serve brands. The consultant does not serve solo practitioners. Each exclusion is the sentence doing its job.

THE TEMPLATE

FILL IN YOUR SENTENCE

Draft three versions. Do not try to write the right one first — write three bad ones first. The right one is usually a combination of two of the bad ones.

SPECIFIC BUYER

Name a real buyer from your past three projects. Not a category — a person.

SPECIFIC OUTCOME

The change they cared about. Not the deliverable you produced.

SPECIFIC APPROACH

How you do it. The method, the duration, the format.

SPECIFIC CHANGE

What becomes possible six months later. Not what you delivered — what they can do now.

WHO IS EXCLUDED

Three buyers you would politely decline today. If you cannot name them, the sentence is not finished.

YOUR THREE DRAFTS

Draft 01

Draft 02

Draft 03

The goal of positioning is not to sound impressive. It is to make the right next conversation easy to start.
